Han Sang-gyun Lee Young-joo

Rally at the South Korean Consulate
1pm, Friday 9/2/18 – 636 St Kilda Road Melbourne

The former president of the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU), Han Sang-gyun, is still serving his three-year sentence in Hwasung Correction Centre. Han led the trade union movement in various protests and the people's rally on 14 November 2015 against the regressive labour reforms under the former Park Geun-hye government.

Despite the repeated calls of international trade unions, Han was not included in the special pardon granted by the Korean President last December. Instead, on 31 December 2017, the former General Secretary of KCTU, Lee Young-joo, was arrested by the police when she left the headquarter of the ruling Democratic Party where she had been on hunger strike for ten days in protest of the amendments to the Labour Standards Act. The police had also issued an unlimited arrest warrant for her role in organising the People's Mass Mobilisation of November 14, 2015.

All this is part of a global offensive by capital against workers. The aim is to make workers pay for the ongoing economic crisis and to increase profits for companies and capitalists. To defeat this offensive, workers have to join together globally. Only by coordinating struggles and campaigns at an international level will workers be able to defeat this offensive. We demand the release of Han Sang Gyun and the dropping of charges against all other arrested labour activists in South Korea.
